

It embraces the department of Agricultural Chemistry, now so justly attracting the attention of a very large portion of farmers. It represents the sixteen simple bodies which constitute the great mass of the earth's crust--the rocks and soil--together with the entire vegetable and animal kingdoms. It shows their relative qualities by squares of different sizes, and the different properties of substances by colors. Then, by lines, the affinity of simple bodies is represented, and the whole is clear, simple, and comprehensive.

The fact that it has been examined by Professor Stillman, Draper, Gray, Torry, Hopkine, Ellet, Chilton, and Antisell, and highly commended by each, is a sufficient guarantee of its scientific accuracy.
